FEAR OF GOD: Fear of God is based on reverence and a realisation of the great gulf that separates sinful man from God. It was realised in the cry of Abraham: I will speak to my God though I am but dust and ashes. Moses too had this fear at the burning bush: Moses hid his face because he was afraid to look on God. Those who have this fear of God are those who have a real insight into his holiness. This holiness of God comprises several elements. It is mysterious, full of majesty, attractive yet frightening so that one faced with it has a sense of his own nothingness.

Peter experienced this fear of God in today's Gospel but mingled with it was a great love. Peter certainly loved the Lord when he knelt at his feet and said: Depart from me because I am a sinful man, O Lord. He felt at that moment his own weakness in the face of such great power: he realised how unworthy he was in the presence of the holiness of Christ. He had fished all night and brought his nets back empty. He contrasted that with the full nets that Christ had given him. At the same time, he was drawn to Christ by his love for him, and certainly did not mean his words to be taken literally. His joy must have been complete when he heard Christ's reassuring words: Fear not, for henceforth you shall catch men. "Admire", said St. John Chrysostom, "the dispensation of the Lord; how he draws each by the art most familiar to him and natural to him: the Magi by a star, the fishermen by fish". For what was happening was a living parable. For a time, the lake of Galilee became a world wide ocean, and the fish the people who live in it. Christ and his apostles are to draw them into their net. This scene is a wonderful revelation of the power and holiness of the personality of Christ.
